A Self-Examination Question

PRESENT conditions of social unrest exist because of what our public schools taught a generation ago, or in spite of it. American public education must take a new inventory of what it is offering now to the welfare of our country fifty years hence. What am I doing, what is the educational group with which I am team-working doing, the results of which will be looked upon by capable judges a half century hence as a positive contribution, however small, to American public education?
